{poem88}

at Tanner Hill Gallery

Atlanta artists Robin Bernat and Karen Tauches have newly formed poem88, an artist collective housed at Tanner Hill Gallery in Atlanta's Westside Arts District. poem88 designs and produces exhibitions, performances, special events, publications and other printed matter. Additionally, the collective promotes and pursues intriguing collaborations in all creative disciplines.

{Poem88} at Tanner Hill Gallery will present its first exhibition "EK Huckaby: Excursus." A long-time fixture in the Atlanta arts community, Huckaby's work typically has explored undercurrents of mystery and the occult within a philosophical framework of his own making. Referencing a train of thought in a new direction, "Excursus" presents Huckaby's recent explorations of light seen through his now trademark alchemical varnishes. Aspects of Southern Gothic, spiritualism, and a kind of personalized system of scientific classification continue to coalesce in Huckaby's work and re-emerge as a kind of reverie for something lost.

We will be participating in the Westside Arts District Saturday Artwalk on October 16. Reception for "Excursus" will be from 7pm to 9pm that evening.

poem88 at Tanner Hill Gallery will continue, in the future, to present works by locally and nationally recognized artists many of whom have their roots in Atlanta and the South. We are pleased to be a part of a newly invigorated Atlanta arts scene -- one that embraces spontaneity and an exploration of new ideas of art and audience.
